Dictionary skills
Terminology	Apply key terminology when using a dictionary: bilingual, headword, entry, type of word, translation.

Pronunciation Point
Liaison	There is a liaison in the phrase C'est une abeille, but no liaison in the phrase Il est une heure.
The letters 'qu'	The letters 'qu' in English represent two phonemes: [k] and [w]. In French these letters form a grapheme that represents a single phoneme: [k]. The same phoneme can be represented by the letter 'q' without the 'u' if it comes at the end of a word.

Grammar Point
O'clock	The adverb o'clock is an abbreviation of the original phrase of the clock.
Abbreviation	An abbreviation is a shortened form of a word or phrase.
Agreement	As une heure is a noun, it must add a plural ending when necessary, e.g. 2 heures
Questions using inversion	Questions can be formed by inverting the verb and pronoun. In writing, a hyphen is put in between the verb and pronoun, e.g. Quelle heure est-il ?
Clause	A clause is a group of words that can form a sentence, or part of a sentence. It always contains a verb.
Main clause	A main, or independent clause, can stand alone and makes sense.
Subordinate clause	A subordinate, or dependent clause, cannot stand alone and is incomplete by itself.
Simple sentence	A simple sentence is made up of one clause.
Complex sentence	A complex sentence is made up of at least two clauses: main and subordinate.
Cognates	Cognates are words in two languages that look or sound similar, and have the same meaning.
False friends	False friends are words in two languages that look or sound similar, but do not have the same meaning.
